When it comes to our children, the utmost precaution must be exercised in all things...especially those things that scientists are in the process of learning about. Scientists are not in agreement about the potential harms to children from constant and chronic WiFi exposure because they literally don't know. Our entire population is a living experiment. Our children are already challenged to the max, medically and developmentally speaking, and we cannot afford to take the less conservative road only to find out 10 or 20 years from now that we've damaged young brains, bodies or potential in any way. It is not only their future that we could be gambling with, but ours too.

Let's just hard-wire those computers and not gamble with our most precious resource.
